Abstract

We have chosen to use a non-traditional approach to the preparation of abstracts for this conference. This has been done to ensure that (a) both clinicians and researchers are encouraged to present, (b) less experienced presenters are not intimidated by the prospect of writing a submission, and (c) conference delegates are provided with a clear and concise explanation of your presentation, please respond to the following questions. Your responses to each of the following three questions will be compiled to form your abstract.

What is the purpose of your presentation? (100 words max)

In this section explain in plain language what you are hoping to achieve through this presentation. You might, for example, want to help delegates learn a new skill, to present the results of a research study, or to raise an issue that requires further attention in clinical practice and research.

What information will you present? (300 words max)

In this section explain what information you intend to present. You might, for example, intend to present a case study or the results of a research study. You might also want to present a personal experience or the outcome of an initiative or project in your clinical service. The information you present will be used to judge the quality, depth, and relevance of your presentation. If you are presenting the results of a research study, it is expected that you will clearly outline your design, method, and the results of your study in this section.

How does your presentation relate to the theme ‘Collective Wisdom?’ (100 words max)

In this section please explain in plain language how your presentation relates to the conference theme ‘Collective Wisdom: Client | Research | Therapist.’ You might intend for your presentation to address one, two, or all three aspects of the theme.

Why is your presentation relevant? (100 words max)

In this section explain why delegates will find your presentation relevant. You may, for example, be planning to present new information or novel research findings, to impart a practical skill that will help clinicians in the field, or inform clinicians and researchers of a new development or initiative in the field.

Please complete all sections of this form using single spaced 12 point times new roman font. All text should be left aligned. Save your document as a Microsoft Word file and email to spotondd@gmail.com
